Bridging the breach in patient-staff relationships

— a 54 minute, color production on videotape or 16 mm film —

THE DIFFICULT, ABRASIVE PATIENT . . . the controlling staff . . . their relationships . . . gathering and assessing all the pertinent information . . . employing the problem-solving process and techniques of intervention. This is the focus of the new 54-minute color videotape/film production titled, "Sounds of Anger, Echoes of Fear," by the American Journal of Nursing Company.

The first half sets up the traumatic situation, giving the viewer an opportunity to assess the components of patient-staff relationships and evaluate their significance.

This is followed by hard analysis of both patient and nursing staff. A clinical nurse specialist helps patient and staff develop insights and solutions that require give and take on everyone's part. The mechanisms of fear, anxiety, hostility and their manifestations all surface in this case study of a situation that virtually every nurse faces at some point in her career.

This uniquely valuable study in the tradition of "Mrs. Reynolds Needs a Nurse," is available exclusively through the American Journal of Nursing Company. Order yours today at the address listed below. It comes complete with discussion guide, and is a natural for in-service education and nursing school programs. Or for more information, just clip and mail the coupon below.
